“Biological diversity is the key to the maintenance of the world as we know it.”

~ E.O. Wilson, Biodiversity

What are natives?

Native plants are plants indigenous to a given area in geologic time. This includes plants that have developed, occur naturally, or existed for many years in an area. As humans introduce plants to new locations for cultivation, or transport them by accident, some of them may become invasive species, damaging native plant communities. Invasive species can have profound effects on ecosystems by changing ecosystem structure, function, species abundance, and community composition. Besides ecological damage, these species can also damage agriculture, infrastructure, and cultural assets. Government agencies and environmental groups are directing increasing resources to addressing these species.

*Note* There may be more option in stock since new varieties are being developed often. Not all plants are available at all times. Not all cultivars of a specific native genera are considered to be native.
